

WAHLERT CATHOLIC PRESENTS:

THE CURIOUS

SAVAGE

Directors Notes

When I first read through The Curious Savage, I fell instantly in love with the characters that reside in the home. I wanted to learn more about them and why they ended up where they ended up. On the surface, they seem like everyday “normal” people, however; something has caused them to no longer be able to live in the outside world. Dr. Emmett mentions that they live in their own “eggshell world” and they only see what they wish to see. I wanted to really show the eggshell world that these individuals live in. The walls of their home curve in, giving the feeling that those that live in the home are in a safe bubble or eggshell. Each character in the home has their own color showing how these characters see themselves, with absolutely nothing to hide about who they are. The bright vibrant colors of those that live in the home are a stark contrast to the stepchildren, who are dull and boring. To Mrs. Savage and the characters living in the home, the outside world can be an unpleasant and boring place to live.
